Nurses vote for industrial action over cuts threat

NURSES were last night the latest group of angry public sector workers to vote for industrial action over threatened government cuts.

The Irish Nurses' Organisation (INO) revealed 85pc of members voted in favour of work stoppages to protect existing pay and conditions of employment.

The union said the nationwide ballot has given it the mandate to have nurses withdraw from labour while maintaining all essential and emergency services.

Two years ago nurses staged a seven-week dispute over pay and conditions which involved a work-to-rule and lunchtime protests.
